

A HELPLESS INFANT.

Its Papa, Mamma and Would-be Protectors.

One of those peculiar incidents that frequently occur around the haunts of justice took place some time since, with the County Court House for the scene of operations. A man and woman peered at the above-named place, with an infant which they said they desired to adopt. They were informed by an official that nothing could be done in the matter in a legal way until the parents of the child were brought before the court. After considerable delay and hesitation the would-be protectors to the helpless infant managed to convey the information to the mind of the court that the little stranger had had the misfortune to be born outside of the bonds of wedlock. They further intimated that while there was no doubt but that the mother of the unfortunate young one could be produced, they were much inclined to doubt as to whether the father could be prevailed upon to show up. On being again assured that nothing could be done in the case without the consent of the father, the couple left the court room. They were not long absent, however, and when they returned the alleged father of the little one accompanied them. He did not deny that the child was his, and he was very anxious that it should be allowed to adopt the infant. But here again was a difficulty. The mother was not present and could not be found; the judge again refused to take any steps in the matter, until the mother had been brought into court, and the couple refused to take the child away with them unless it was accompanied by the necessary legal papers. The father hemmed and hawed and said at last to know what steps to take, next, while he was hesitating, the prosecuting attorney Waddell stepped up and informed him that unless the child was well and properly taken care of, he should consider it his duty to bring the matter to the attention of the court in a criminal action. At this the father became somewhat agitated. He glanced nervously around, made a dive for the infant, rushed from the building and disappeared in a daze.

A few days after the occurrence noted above a young woman with a baby in her arms called at the supposed residence of the father previously mentioned, and knocked for admittance. The door was opened by a young lady of the house, when the woman thrust the infant forward and said: "Take this child—it belongs to your brother." Considering the fact that the only brother in the household had always been considered a youth of at least average moral habits, the young lady's surprise can, perhaps, be imagined, but scarcely described. She involuntarily reached out her hands for the burden, but quickly drew back and called for her mother, who soon appeared. "Take this child—it belongs to your brother," she repeated, and the mother, who had been hunting for the child for some time, said she would take it, but without success, until he heard from the gentleman who had read the notice in THE HERALD. There is a moral attached to this.

The two soldiers McMillan and Baldis, who were arrested on the charge of stealing clothing from Madsen's second-hand store, were arraigned before Judge Speirs yesterday, and both pleaded guilty to the indictment. The captain of the company to which they belonged testified to the previous good conduct of the men, and gave it as his opinion that the soldiers must have been under the influence of liquor when the crime was committed. They will be sentenced to-day.

AMUSEMENTS.

ZILLAH.—The drama on the pockets of theatre-goers, instituted by the Mikado, and a drizzly, muddy night, hurt the opening performance of Janauschek to some extent, and only a fairly filled house assembled to see her Zillah last evening. There was no lack of warmth and genuine enthusiasm however, on the part of those who witnessed the performance. Janauschek was greeted on her appearance with a hearty round of applause before she had spoken a word, and at the end of each act, the demonstrations amounted to repeated ovations. The curtain ascended again after every act in response to the long-continued applause, and the actress was forced to make her re-appearance and to again and again bow her acknowledgments. The play of Zillah, every one knows, and an extended notice of it was given when Janauschek presented at the Opera House on her previous visit. It is the same play which Julia Dean Hayne used to act under the title of the Woman in Red, and in which Rose Kytinge scored several failures under the name of the Two Mothers. It is a drama of the very sombre hue, but one which gives the star inimitable opportunities for the display of power and emotion—two respects in which Janauschek is unsurpassed. Advancing age seems to have no diminution of her powers, and she still enters with all the magnetic feeling or thunders forth her anathemas with all the force of years ago. Her accent is much the same as on her last visit, not at first agreeable, but growing on one until it is lost sight of altogether in the fire of a genius. Her best scene last night was that with the countess; her worst, that in the prologue over the loss of her child; whether she felt the silliness of the house or not, she played the comedy of the night, which he did in an off hand way; Carden and Stuart both afforded good support, and Miss Reed did some very excellent and graceful acting as the daughter. Miss Nelson and Miss De Forrest were the leading features of the remaining support. To-night the new drama, "My Life," will be given, and as it affords an opportunity for a display of the role characters entirely dissimilar (and all who remember Black House will not need to be reminded how admirably Janauschek interpreted Hortense and Lady Dedlock) a large increase of business is expected.

MACBETH.—In response to a number of requests and suggestions presented to the management last evening, they have decided on changing the bill for Saturday evening, and giving Macbeth in place of Marie Anna. The title role will be played by Carden, and Janauschek will do Lady Macbeth, said to be one of her very strongest impersonations. It is to be hoped that an effort will also be made to produce the piece with Locke's music, and the full chorus of witches.

ONLY AN ASSAULT.

Anderson Gets Three Months in the County Jail.

The trial of Anderson, the shoemaker indicted for an attempt to commit rape upon a little girl, consumed all the morning before Judge Zane yesterday. The testimony adduced did not differ from that brought out in the Police Court. The jury retired and after being out several hours, returned with a verdict of guilty of an assault merely, and added a recommendation of mercy. Anderson waived the time for receiving sentence, and Judge Zane gave him three months in the County Jail.

Brigham Young's Engine.

An old curiosity is at the Utah & Northern shops in the shape of Brigham Young's famous engine, with which he used to travel over the road when the road was under his control. The engine was manufactured by the Grant Locomotive Works in September, 1872. Its capacity was thirty-five miles an hour. The cylinders are twelve inches in diameter with a twenty-inch stroke, and when on the road it had three foot driving wheels. The company are now using it for a stationary to supply the motive power in the shops. Engineer Stewart is proud of his engine.—Butte Miner.

An Internal Revolution.

Which enables the stomach to throw off the yoke of dyspepsia, is effected through the aid of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a most efficient ally in warring with all disorders which affect the digestive organs, the liver and the bowels. When the dyspeptic experiences heartburn, wind on the stomach, or any of the other familiar symptoms of his malady, a wineglassful of this matchless stomachic will dissipate them, and a cure of the remedy bring about a cure. Constipation and biliousness, evils to the relief of which aperients and cathartics are inadequate, also yield to this fine alterative. The restoration of appetite and nightly repose, and the disappearance of those nervous symptoms that habitually annoy the chronic sufferer from dyspepsia, also ensue upon the use of the Bitters, which is likewise a standard remedy and preventive of fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney and bladder troubles and debility.

AT A BEAR'S CAVE.

Adventure With a Grizzly in the Wilds of Idaho.

We have in this place three sturdy young men, by the name of Sam, Lon and Orse Barker. On the 17th of October they took their guns and went in quest of deer, and while skirting the base of the east mountains that surround this valley, Sam came upon a spot of ground that was torn up fearfully with imprints of large feet and other evidences of the presence of bears or other large animals. On looking to his right, he saw a large hole or cave in the rocks. He soon satisfied himself as to the occupant of the cave, and Summoning Lon to his aid, they went boldly up to the hole, when right in front of them a huge monster reared upon its haunches and with a low growl bade them be gone. But the hunters were of stout hearts that knew no fear, so raising their guns, they sent two bullets through her monstrous head—Sam's ball at the base of the brain, but too low, Lon's just under the eye and too low for the work for which it was intended. This threw her back and caused her to change ends, when Sam gave her another in the hind quarters, which so enraged her that she turned on the hunters with all the fury of a wounded grizzly. She had counted without the grizzly, however, for the boys stood by their guns and received her charge to within 4 feet of their muzzles, when they both fired, sending two more balls through her brain, and she fell dead at their feet.

The animal weighed in the neighborhood of 850 pounds. The hunters bore off the beautiful skin in triumph, but left the carcass where it had fallen. They subsequently returned, however, and secured eleven gallons of oil from the body of the beast. WILL SMITH, Elkay, Cassia Co., Idaho, Oct. 26, 1885.

AN ORE CASE.

A Question as to the Mine from Which a Shipment was Made.

The afternoon before Judge Zane, yesterday, was occupied in hearing the case of John Cunningham et al vs. John S. Scott, a suit which involves the question of whether or not a certain lot of ore, valued at about $500, and sold to Scott & Anderson, the ore buyers of this city, originally came from the Silver Spar mine in Tintic. Mr. Cunningham and Mr. Cusick, the plaintiffs, allege that the ore came from the mine in question, which is their property, and it was replevined some time ago at their instance. James Harrington and Timothy Murphy, two full-blooded sons of Ireland, and the men accused of having taken out the ore, were examined yesterday. Both swore that the ore was taken from the Old Chief. Marshall & Royle appear for the defense and A. G. Sutherland and Woods & Hoffman for the plaintiffs.

Serious Accident.

Yesterday morning, at about 8.30, as Mr. U. D. Major, proprietor of the Eagle Flouring Mills, at Kayville, went to turn the water in the flume, preparatory to starting the mill for the day. As the gentleman was passing the pen stock, he leaned over to see if the same was clear, when, through some cause he lost his balance and fell foremost to the bottom, a distance of several yards, remaining there for nearly an hour. The result of the fall has not been determined, however, the gentleman, when found, was unconscious and considerably bruised around the head. At a late hour last evening, when our informant last heard, Mr. Major was resting some, and hopes were entertained for his recovery.

Notice to Teachers.

The Salt Lake County Teachers' Association will meet as usual in the Fourteenth Ward Assembly Rooms, at 11 a. m. next Saturday. A good programme has been prepared, and Superintendent Stewart is going to tell what constitutes a good school, and vice versa. Teachers and trustees should therefore be present, so that they may better understand the condition of their own schools, and know how to improve them.

CATTLE AND SHEEP.

A Granger's Predicament in Regard to the Animals.

To the Editor of THE HERALD.

Last spring, about the 1st of April, I got a pet lamb and was afraid to turn it on the range; it is now about six months old. I have been talking about giving it away, but I do not want to get anybody else into trouble, if they should turn it on the range, so I have concluded to go to St. Louis with the stockmen and try and compromise with them about the range question, as the cattle, horses and sheep all run on the range, and one has as good a right to the grass as the others. If we cannot compromise and one of us go on one side of this valley and the other on the other side, we will ask that great convention to petition our great father at Washington to lay this whole question before Congress for legislation, and that they pass some kind of a law, and have Commissioners to lay off this land in districts so that each party would know where to take his sheep, and then horse and cattle men would know where to take their stock. Then that man over the way would perhaps be reconciled, so that neither party would be killed, for it is much easier to settle this question before fighting than it would be afterwards, and no body killed. Some one may ask me why I don't attend to my farming and let the cattle and sheep alone. The reason is we have to keep a cow, and they are increasing, and the sheep may increase, and it is such a great expense to raise wheat and have to irrigate that it is necessary to have some stock too, and we want to find out what to do with it.

Join the Association.

To the Editor of THE HERALD:

We receive letters daily from parties in Utah who have had stock stolen, and who wish us to take means to capture the thieves for them. We wish them to distinctly understand that, unless they belong to either the County or Territorial Association, we cannot do anything for them. If they wish our help they must join us, for we have neither time nor money to expend on those who have not been received as members of our association.

We will further say, that those who wish to attend the Granger's convention, which will be held in St. Louis this month, need not apply for passes unless they have been sent by the organization to which they belong.
